The use of drawings and other art work in counselling have been found to be a very gentle but profound way of communicating the grief experience and current life themes for people of all ages.

The power of drawings as a therapeutic tool has been well documented over the years. Creative techniques in therapy have been found to be a potent way of working with children who have been witness to or victims of violence, war and natural disasters. Recent neurobiology research has indicated that creative techniques may assist with the processing of the trauma experience and memory.

Spontaneous and impromptu drawings can be utilized in counselling to enable insight into beliefs, emotional reactions and behaviors of clients that often go unrecognized or unacknowledged by conventional methods. It is a tool that can facilitate the telling of a client's story and assist with communicating the impact, journey and growth trajectories of the experience. It can assist in engaging the client in the therapeutic relationship and assist the therapist to be mindful of key issues and possible barriers to the therapeutic process.

Julie will present the theory of interpretation of drawings, along with selected case studies to demonstrate the power of drawings in the counselling process. Participants will be introduced to various questioning techniques by utilizing their own impromptu drawings on the day and through guided small group work.

This course is open to:

Counsellors, psychologists, occupational therapists, social workers, teachers and mental health workers.
